Something occurred with the Soviet Cosmonauts in the Salyut 7 that orbited the earth on July 12, 1984. Several Cosmonauts (not crazy people-but highly educated intelligent people- trained astronaut pilots, scientists and even doctors). "What we saw were seven giant figures in the form of humans, but with wings and mist-like halos as in the classic depiction of angels."

The heavenly visitors, they said, followed them for about 10 minutes and vanished as suddenly as they had appeared. However, 12 days later, Cosmonauts Svetlana Savitskaya, Igor Volk, and Vladimir Dzhanibekov, who had just joined the others on the space station, also saw the beings- Solovyov and Atkov could no longer dismiss the phenomenon as a communal hallucination. "They were glowing," they reported. "We were truly overwhelmed. There was a great orange light, and through it, we could see the figures of seven angels. The cosmonauts went on to described these mist haloed beings as being nearly 80-feet in height with a wingspan comparable to that of a 747 jet; although, it should be noted, that there's no indication in the public record of how these men of science came to these proportional estimations. They were smiling as though they shared a glorious secret, but within a few minutes, they were gone. (Parade Magazine- New Years Edition 1985. 1985 Washington Post Newspaper.) Additional Information: According to the Technical Memorandum for the Salyut, over 20,000 photos were taken during that mission. - John Massaria (NY 2012)

In July 1984, Russian cosmonauts on the Soviet space station Salyut 7 were on day 155 of their mission. This day group reported strange lights and beings. According to commander Oleg Atkov and cosmonauts Vladimir Solovyov and Leonid Kizim, the space station was completely bathed in a mesmerizing orange light. It appeared to enter from outside the space station and bleed through an absolutely opaque wall.

For a short period of time, the orange light was so bright that it blinded the crew. When their vision returned, each one looked out the portholes for the source of the light, looking specifically for a possible explosion. They knew the Salyut 7 had suffered previous fires, but what the crew saw was more incomprehensible than the orange light.

The cosmonauts reported seeing the faces of seven angels who were hovering just outside the space station. These beings kept pace with the space station for 10-minutes before vanishing.

12 days later, another team of three cosmonauts arrived at the station. Shortly after coming on board, the Salyut 7 was once again bathed in a warm orange light. The beings were once again visible through the portholes. All the cosmonauts reported seeing "a smiling angel." While some may dismiss the incident as fatigue due to an extended stay in space, but there was more than one crew that saw the beings.

"I have asked for them [Fred and Sherrie Loertscher] to evolve that which is termed a trust account. I have asked and will ask for every master to contribute to that which is termed five of your dollars to this account. And it is the account of the masters. And it is to help illiteracy and hunger and catastrophic disease of those people that you love. And to those who cannot, there will be a reserve made for them."
